ECT remains one of the more contentious treatment modalities in medicine, and certainly the most contentious in psychiatry, even today. There has been a relatively large amount of work done to examine the best way to give the treatment and NICE guidance CG90: Depression in Adults, gives additional perspectives.

This seminar aims to first give a historical perspective, then examining the recent literature, how this has affected practice of ECT. The changes in legislation that have impacted on the use of ECT will also be discussed.

After you have attended this seminar, you will:
- be able to optimise the treatment process
- understand the scientific basis for the treatment thus far
- understand the key legal issues related to ECT

About our speaker: Dr Andrew Easton is a consultant forensic psychiatrist working in Leeds and York Partnership Foundation Trust, having previously worked in general psychiatry and rehabilitation. He has been lead consultant for ECT since first becoming a consultant in 1992, initially in Huddersfield and then in Leeds. The Leeds service has just been granted ‘excellence’ by ECTAS in its most recent review. In 2000, he joined the Royal College of Psychiatrists Special Committee for ECT and related treatments, and has recently completed his term of office as chair (since 2006). He has been a regular lecturer on both the Royal College of Psychiatrists’ ECT training days as well as on the Royal College of Nursing’s ECT competencies training course.
