Presented by Graham Firth, Intensive Interaction Project Leader, Leeds and York NHS Foundation Trust, this training will help delegates look at the underlying processes for effectively developing and sustaining 'best quality' Intensive Interaction across a variety of working and care contexts. This training will provide delegates with the tools required to identify and implement service level developments that will support the effective use of Intensive Interaction strategies.

This training will also support delegates to develop short, medium and longer term plans to embed Intensive Interaction across a service

This course aims to provide delegates with:

- To develop a better understanding of systems for service evaluation and development
- To have a better understanding of how to develop and sustain best quality Intensive Interaction practices at an individual staff or service level
- To develop short, medium and longer term plans to embed Intensive Interaction across a team or service

About our speaker:

After working for 6 years as a care-assistant at a large residential hospital for adults with learning disabilities, Graham Firth, became a qualified teacher. Initially working in mainstream primary schools, he then moved into further education for adults with severe or profound learning disabilities, many of whom had severe challenging behaviour. It was with such students that he adopted Intensive Interaction as his main classroom practice.

In 2003 Graham took up his current role of Intensive Interaction Project Leader, where he continues to work to train and support others to adopt, develop and sustain their Intensive Interaction practices and services. Over the past 12 years Graham has published a range of Intensive Interaction books, training packs and has also published a number of highly significant Intensive Interaction research and position papers.

Graham is the editor of the UK Intensive Interaction Newsletter, and has also organised the national UK Intensive Interaction conference over the past 14 years.
